President Tanner lauded at building ceremony

By TAMMI WRIGHT
Universe Staff Writer

Special tribute was paid Saturday to N. Eldon Tanner, second counselor in the First Presidency of the LDS Church, during a groundbreaking ceremony for the new N. Eldon Tanner Building. The structure will be situated on the hill south of the Alumni House.

The ceremony was held to honor President Tanner and to show the scores of people who have planned and contributed to the new building that their efforts have been successful, said William G. Dyer, dean of the School of Management.

LDS Church President Spencer W. Kimball, his wife, Camilla, and several members of the LDS Council of the Twelve Apostles and the First Quorum of the Seventy were present.

During a brief greeting, President Kimball commended President Tanner for his service to the LDS Church.

"Anyone who is in the field of management and administration knows that a successful administrator works behind the scenes and rejoices in the successes of others," said Jeffrey R. Holland, BYU president.

"Tanner epitomizes this leadership. He is an example that we may hold up with pride to the students who study here," Holland added.

Tanner stands as a persuasive example of integrity, said Elder Gordon B. Hinckley, of the Council of the Twelve Apostles.

"Integrity is the pressing need of society," Elder Hinckley said. "It is the essence of good family life, government and commerce."

Elder Hinckley said he has observed President

Tanner for a number of years and has never seen him "stoop to a mean, cheap or tawdry action."

"In future years, his life will serve as a remarkable example to the men and women who come here to learn," he said. "The word compromise is utterly foreign to him."

The N. Eldon Tanner Building represents the growth and emergence of a major new profession, Dyer said.

"Our existing facilities will no longer house the largest college on campus," he said. "We now have more than 4,000 graduate and undergraduate students in our program."

Dyer described the facilities to be included in the new seven-story structure.

"Case study rooms, seminar rooms, a panview room, computer labs for microcomputers, faculty offices, a library and a research center will be included in the building," he said. "It will cover 120,000 square feet and will seat 2,000 students at one time."

An atrium, which is a large space in the center of a building that includes such outdoor characteristics as plants and fountains, will extend the full height of the building, Dyer said.

Scientists evaluate California earthquake

EKA, Calif. (AP) — While scientists contemplate about the weekend's terrifying earthquake returned to normal here Sunday with little damage to repair.

Red tombstones, houses dislocated on their sides and a 300-foot gap in a freeway overpass along the signs of the power of Saturday's earthquake which shook this sparsely populated 25 miles north of San Francisco.

Scientists said it will be a few days before they can give a precise rating for the quake on the scale, a measure of ground motion as recorded by seismographs, but estimates ranged from 6.6 to 7.0.

Experts agreed that Saturday's quake was as powerful as one that killed 64 people in the San Francisco area in 1971.

Inspectors study mine blast

CHARLESTON, W. Va. (AP) — Safety inspectors began searching Sunday for the cause of a methane gas explosion that killed five men two miles deep in a coal mine, company officials said.

The five miners, assigned to repair trolley tracks in an unused section of the southern West Virginia mine, died early Friday when a pocket of the gas exploded. Rescue teams were unable to remove the bodies until late Saturday night.

A spokesman at Westmoreland Coal Co.'s Ferrell

No. 17 mine in Robinson said inspectors from the federal Mine Safety and Health Administration, the state Department of Mines, the United Mine Workers of America and the company were assessing the damage and trying to determine why the mine's ventilation system allowed methane to build up.

One strike ends, other starts

KELLOGG, Idaho (AP) — Hours after silver miners ended an eight-month-long strike by approving a new contract at one of the nation's largest silver mines, electricians set up picket lines around the Sunshine Mining Co.

Electricians rejected a company contract proposal presented at the bargaining table Saturday.

However, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers representative Al Teller agreed to call his negotiating committee together late Sunday for an meeting with Sunshine management. There are 21 electricians employed at Sunshine.

The company and United Steel Workers of America, representing 550 miners, reached agreement about noon Saturday.

Underground miners were told to report to their union hall Monday for annual training. Surface miners and millworkers were told to report to the mine for safety training.

The electricians met late Saturday, and it was expected they would approve the proposed contract quickly. But they did not.

Iran, Iraq claim gains in war

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Iran and Iraq traded air and sea raids on each other's oil facilities Sunday and both claimed fresh gains in ground combat.

Iranian President Abolhasan Bani-Sadr convened a war council in an undisclosed city in the frontline province of Khuzistan, Tehran radio reported.

Shortly afterward the radio, monitored here, said Iran would return basic commodities, such as sugar and electricity, to help the war effort and that the price of gasoline in that oil-rich nation soon would be tripled.

Iraq, meanwhile, said it would not free the captured Iranian oil minister and declared that any city the Iraqi forces conquer in Khuzistan will be considered a "liberated territory."

Flying rock injures woman during Y groundbreaking

A flying rock injured a bystander following the dynamite blast which broke ground for the N. Eldon Tanner Building Saturday at 10 a.m. on the hill south of the Alumni House.

Ingeborg Z. Reni, a 30-year-old woman from Curacao, an island off the coast of Brazil, was injured when a rock, apparently propelled by the blast, flew through the trees and struck her in the throat.

Bystanders formed a cordon around the woman until Provo City Medics arrived and took her to the emergency room at Utah Valley Hospital.

"She was stunned pretty bad," said Norm Williams, BYU Security patrolman. "They took her into X-ray and there was the possibility of a broken collarbone or chipped bone."

Officials at the hospital refused to release any information about the extent of the injuries or Mrs. Reni's condition.

"I was standing next to her when a flying rock about half as big as my fist flew over the crowd and struck her in the throat," a spectator said. "It came through the trees about as fast as a baseball. She was flat on her back before I could turn around."

Mrs. Reni was in good spirits and said to tell President Tanner that she was glad to have a memento of the occasion, he said.

"It could have been worse," he said. "It could have hit someone in the head."

A rock must have been in the vicinity of the detonator, William G. Dyer, dean of the School of Management, said. "When it went off, the blast propelled the rock through the crowd. It's one of those freak things that happen."

Mrs. Reni and her husband were visiting Fred Schwendiman, support services vice president.

Y credit union offers 'reasonable' rates

By RUTH HAMILTON
Universe Staff Writer

A familiar motto regarding credit unions is, "Not for profit, not for charity, but for service." Financial service is what the Universal Campus Federal Credit Union offers its members.

Twenty-four years ago, seven BYU faculty members organized the credit union to aid BYU employees, said Jim Stead, assistant manager of UCFCU. "They wanted to provide a good place to save and to borrow money at reasonable rates."

"People helping people" is still the motto of UCFCU which has now expanded to serve both full-time and part-time BYU workers, employees of the LDS Church Educational System, and their families.

Universal, which is situated north of the BYU stadium at 1910 N. 150 East, is invaluable to many. "It extends a great service, said Debbie Harrell, a receptionist at the credit union. "We don't visit my family," said Muriel Thole, a UCFCU board member.

UCFCU, which was established in December 1955, had a modest beginning. Its first office was located on the stair landing of the BYU Bookstore. Finances did not allow for the purchase of a vault so a bathtub was used. At the end of a business day important papers were placed in the tub and covered with an asbestos sheet for fire protection.

BYU English professor Briant S. Jacobs spearheaded its organization. At that time, members could sign for loans and obtain up to $400. Insured loans of $100 were paid back in 12 payroll deductions with $6.50 charged as total interest, said Stead.

Credit unions are organized under state or federal law so that collectively and by cooperative endeavor people may pool individual resources in order to lend money to members at a low interest rate.

"UCFCU is looked upon as a family organization," said Miss Thole. "The ideal is that those members working full time who have a couple of extra dollars, lend them to those members in need at a lower interest rate."

"As Latter-day Saints we have great faith in one another. We try to be careful with the members' money and we try to be as fair as possible," said Miss Thole.

Ninety percent of the full-time BYU employees open an account at UCFCU, said Stead. "After a savings account is established, share drafts (checking accounts) become our most popular feature."

UCFCU offers its members savings plans, loan opportunities, and share draft accounts. Members begin with a savings account, said Debbie Harrell, a receptionist at the credit union. "We offer seven percent interest paid quarterly on this account."

"A lot of part-time students join the UCCU to get our low interest rates on loans," Miss Harrell added. "We charge 15 percent simple interest; most banks in the area charge 18 percent compounded interest."

Part-time BYU employees must be with the university for six months before membership is possible, said Miss Harrell.

All credit checks are run through the Provo Credit Bureau, said Stead. When applying for a loan, credit checks are done on new members or members who have never had a credit check.

He added, "We were the first federal credit union in the state of Utah to be allowed share draft accounts. Four years ago, we were chosen by the National Credit Union Association to head a pilot program. At that time, our members had to qualify for share drafts, which involved qualifying for credit. Now all members may have share drafts."

The share drafts are helpful to the part-time BYU employee, providing an inexpensive way for bill paying, said Stead. "There is no service charge and no minimum balance requirement."

At UCFCU, all non-staff leadership positions are unpaid and are held by the members, said Miss Thole. "We're a non-profit organization, so much of our work is done on a voluntary basis. By not having to pay salaries we can keep our interest rates down," she said.

"I recently attended a conference in Wyoming. During a meeting, many people complained that it is hard to find volunteers for their organizations. We don't have that problem here. At BYU we have a group of interested, dedicated people willing to serve."

Church, art to be discussed question of why churches have often been at the heart and have often treated artists as orphans. This will be discussed at the BYU forum Tuesday by the president of the Modern Age Association of America.

Booth's talk is entitled "The Arts in the Church: Orphans, Missionaries, Poes or Friends?" He will discuss what happens when churches try to treat art as simply an extension of missionary work and about what happens when artists try to turn themselves into prophets and art into religion. He will also explore the possibility of true friendship between religion and art — two essentially different enterprises that nevertheless need each other, he observes.

Cruisin' Center - A way of life

By BILL HICKMAN
and BOB SALLANDER
Universe Staff Writers

This is a story for all those who have experienced Van Nuys Blvd. in Los Angeles, Fremont Street in Las Vegas or Golden Gardens in Seattle.

It is for those who have or had a '67 Impala named after their car, equipped with shag-carpeting, TV antenna, six-inch chain steering wheel and organ-pipe speakers; all enclosed in a smoked rear window decorated with dingle balls and a nodding dog.

It is for those who know the power and prestige of sitting behind the teakwood steering wheel of a black '71 Barracuda, listening to a Pioneer Super Tuner blast out the heavy metal of Led Zeppelin in quadrophonic ecstasy.

This is a story for those who know the excitement of cruising, but have never experienced it Center Street style.

By day, Provo's Center Street is a busy, but unassuming thoroughfare. It has a conservative speed limit of 15 mph and provides access to many of Provo's more established businesses.

But come 9 p.m. on Friday or Saturday, the housewives leave, the shops close and the street's atmosphere changes. The cop population doubles and the sounds of glass-pacs cut through the cold as a different clientele takes to the road.

Mud-splattered, gas-guzzling, roving rock-concert, four-wheel drive trucks and independently sprung, 11-to-one compressed, Doug Nash-gesered, ram-shifted dreams come alive. From '57 Chevys to '64 Mustangs to '72 El Caminos, almost anything goes as long as it's fast and loud.

If someone is driving Mama's car, he or she might as well not show up on Center Street. But if that's your only alternative you can always park it and act as if it doesn't belong to you.

We happened to be driving a car that looked like it belonged to Mama, so we parked and walked, but were at no disadvantage for the lively action available on Utah County's numero uno strip.

As we strolled down the island in the middle of the street two peroxide haired high school babes pulled up and yelled, "Hey, you wanna get raped?"

Never having been asked this before we continued cruising down the street, giving the girls no more than a condescending one-eyed stare.

We walked less than a block when two other brunette floozies, make-up called on and Barry Manilow blazng, said, "You guys shouldn't walk Center Street at night, you might get attacked."

"By whom," we asked with anticipated interest.

"By girls," they laughed, and moved on, desperately searching for a pickup. After two come-ons in 10 minutes we decided to move on to safer grounds. We ran into a group of Brute-splashed, macho, pseudo-weightlifters, rockin' out to Boston and trying to look as if they had just been transplanted from Marlboro Country.

We found high schoolers, high school dropouts and the mentally high schoolish. The goat ropers and red-necks were striking their usual bloated-chest, sucked-in gut, hip out, hands-in-pockets, super-stud poses by their pithus as the dames breezed by for inspection.

We spotted one interesting individual who didn't quite fit the mold, so we set out to see what made him tick.

This bearded, beer-gutted, 40-year-old teeny bopper claimed he had stalked Center Street every night for the past two years. He knew every intricacy of the Provo night life, every car on the road and every cruiser of the female persuasion in those cars.

"Nothin' to do at home but stare at four walls," he apologized.

About 10:30 p.m., after two buses, a cherry bomb explosion and several minor flirtations at drag racing, the Provo police decided they had had enough and blocked the road. Their aim: disperse the crowd, now numbering 200 cars.

"Where's everyone going," we asked ignorantly.

"Goin' runnin'," the 40-year-old grunted.

Out on Conney Road, just south of the Provo Municipal Golf Course, the "runnin'" began.

The road is the best in Utah County. It is long, straight, and believe it or not, chuck-hole free.

We pulled up just in time to see the warm-ups. The smallest, barest rubber replaced the cigarette smoke as two souped-up machines eased up to the starting line, smoking their Parnelli Jones 6-50-15s in the process.

Oohs and aahs arose from the little cluster of burn-outs at the sight of this pre-race ritual, which left a half-inch of tire on the road.

When the smoke cleared, we spotted the daring individual designated as the official starter planted in the middle of the drag strip. Like starting flags, he dropped his arms and a long loud screech drowned out the music as four pairs of tail lights disappeared into the darkness.

The harmless race lasted only a few seconds, then everyone took his partner and headed for who-knows-where.

Back on Center Street, three rough looking guys in a Gremlin with California license plates summed up the evening for us. It seemed Center Street's atmosphere, whatever it was, didn't have what they were looking for.

"Just passing through," we interjected.

"You better believe it," they mused.

Home of fast cars, and loud music, Center Street in Provo has been the center of high school nightlife for decades. On Friday and Saturday evening cruising is the favorite pastime, but occasionally the street lovers take a break from their cars as shown by this group.

Principal assaults referee

HOMEDALE, Idaho (AP)—Wayne Auer, an official at the Homedale-Teton high school football playoff game Friday night, said he was struck in the stomach by Teton Principal Gene Capp late in the game.

Auer said he and Capp were taken to the Homedale, Police Station. Auer said Capp wasn't hurt because he had to drive the Teton team bus back to Driggs.

The official said he was taken to Caldwell Memorial Hospital for X-rays which proved negative. Auer said he would probably file assault charges against the school official on Monday, but planned to talk to his attorney.

Capp couldn't be reached for comment.

Homedale won the football game 36-6. Teton was penalized nine times for 83 yards. Homedale was penalized for 71 yards.

Postal officials investigate vacation offers

By JERRY PAINTER
Universe Editor

Las Vegas vacation offers appearing recently in Utah County mailboxes could be a rip-off and are being investigated by the U.S. Postal Service for mail fraud, postal officials said.

Kathy Lee, of the Postal Inspector's Fraud Division in Fort Worth, Texas, said her office is investigating World Travel Inc., 5510 Abrams, Dallas, Texas, for sending vacation offers, "which are just too good to be true," to several Western cities.

Some of the offers from the Texas company have appeared recently in Orem City mailboxes.

Offer too good

The mail advertisements usually appear in a telegram form with "Speed Gram" printed across the top. The message tells the residents personally that they have been selected to receive a three-day and two-night Las Vegas, or other resort city, vacation for two and that they should call or send money immediately. One "Speed Gram" from World Travel offers "a casino package with a minimum of $1,000 worth of gaming materials, free drinks, free meals and two-for-one passes." The offer includes $118 in nickels and hotel accommodations.

To take the Las Vegas vacation, a $80 deposit or service charge is required to "guarantee your arrival and will be redeemed by participating Casino package."

Postal officials said sometimes the companies request personal credit card numbers, supposedly to confirm identity, but actually to bill prospective buyers through the credit card companies.

Some of the offers from the Texas company have appeared recently in Orem City mailboxes.

Vacations fall short
Mrs. Lee said all investigations in the vacation mail offers indicate people can't get as much as the advertisement describes.

"I interviewed one woman who took the Las Vegas vacation and she said the accommodations were out in the boon docks in a run-down motel. She got no cash; there was no transportation available and the cash nickels turned out to be tokens which could only be used at the place she was staying," Mrs. Lee said.

Kenneth Fletcher, national chief postal inspector, said, "at least 12 separate companies are now contacting prospective buyers about types of vacations by mail and telephone are under investigation."

"Typically, those who take the bait have to pay

Refunds phony

Miss Larsen said some companies send out coupons or certificates for buyers to send back for a refund. When the recipient sends back the coupon he receives a packet in the mail from a company with a different name and a COD charge as much as $20. "Thinking the package is for their husband or someone else, recipients pay for it," she said, "and they have a difficult time ever getting a refund."

"Typically, those who take the bait have to pay

additional fees and reservation deposits," Fletcher said. "The so-called service charge is not refunded as represented in an initial offer."

Fletcher said vacation certificate holders are often met with "regret" letters advising that no rooms are available on the days requested and when refunds are requested, buyers get letters asking them to be patient.

Bob Cook, Provo Post Office director of customer service, said people need to be more wary of what they receive in the mail and report suspicious mail problems.

America and recipient of the 1980 BYU National Executive of the Year award, spoke to a group of business executives during a dinner Friday.

recent presidential election is a step in combating high inflation, recession, sluggish economic growth, unemployment, deficit government spending and climbing interest rates, Clausen said.

"Our heavy dependence on imported energy has exposed America's jugular vein — her national security," he said.

Awareness that something was seriously wrong with the economy grew in the decade of the '70s, Clausen said.

"The 1980s will test our ability, intelligence and will to change the trend," he said. "Our task will be to sort through the possible courses of action and come up with the right answers, then put these answers into action."

One proposal for improving the economy which merits close examination is known as revitalization or reindustrialization, Clausen said.

"Reindustrialization calls for a broad program of government initiatives to increase productivity," he said. "Unfortunately, it has become a buzz word for curing all ills."

No segment of society is blameless in America's growing economic crisis,
Clausen said.

"Government spending has had an inflationary bent," he said. "When the federal budget is deficit, policy makers must increase the money supply."

Taxation and regulation have stimulated consumption, Clausen said.

"An alphabet soup of government agencies have been granted sweeping

"Costs have not been a consideration.
The total cost of complying with government regulations exceeds $100 billion annually."

Public attitudes are also responsible for the economic decline, Clausen said.

"Attitudes of the '50s, '60s and '70s have been dominated by a 'me' mentality," he said. "Despite a high standard of living, the public has demanded even more. As a result, a laboring, tired economy has bent."

According to public opinion polls, people want to improve the economy,
but they are unwilling to sacrifice,
Clausen said.

"There is the feeling that wages must keep in step with inflation," he said. "This creates the illusion that people are winning when most are not."

Members of the business world have been so complacent and self-assured, they are not prepared to deal with inflation, Clausen said.

"They have little experience in decision making and public policy debate," he said. "Expenditure action has too often taken precedence over long range actions."

Despite public failure to combat economic decline, government intervention is no solution, Clausen said.

"There is little reason to believe that government agents can select the right businesses to support," he said. "And there is a strong likelihood that aid would be influenced by political pressure."

People need to understand that a productive economy has limits, Clausen said.

"Our ability to meet economic challenges hinges on seeing the economy as a horse pulling the load," he said. "Any enduring improvement in economic conditions must be preceded by an improvement in social conditions."

Reagan, Congress agree on added defense spending

WASHINGTON (AP) — President-elect Ronald Reagan should have little trouble getting more defense money from Congress, possibly even the $20 billion one adviser says he could request.

Congress is already so defense-minded that it approved $5 billion more for weapons than President Carter asked. And voters elected even more defense supporters to the new Congress convening in January.

The Reagan adviser,
William Van Cleave, told
CBS reporter Ike Pappas on Thursday that a $20 billion increase next year is not inconceivable to correct deficiencies, particularly manpower problems.

Rep. Joseph P. Ad-dabbo, D-N.Y., an occasional critic of defense spending and chairman of the House defense appropriations subcommittee, says Congress might approve that.
"I hope not, but they probably would," Ad-dabbo said in an interview. "He'd probably get it, with the mood Congress is in."

That would boost to $195 billion the $175 billion working figure Carter set last July for fiscal 1981. The $175 billion figure itself has probably increased since then.

And a $20 billion increase would boost the appropriation request to Congress to about $211 billion or more. Appropriations are usually higher because they include program funds for future years.

But although Congress is inclined to approve more defense money, there will be some rubs with Reagan on how to spend it.

During his campaign,

the president-elect advocated a military pay and benefit increase to make the all-volunteer military work, a 600-ship Navy fleet, the MX
nuclear missile system, and a million-man ready reserve equipped with modern weapons and able to move quickly into combat.

Congressional committee chairmen generally have agreed at news conferences and in interviews with Reagan's proposals for pay increases and a combat-ready reserve.

receives synthetic fuel grant time and money aren't the only things burned at BYU. A recent grant given to BYU's mechanical and chemical engineering departments will bring about the burning of coal, shale, tar sand and other solid fuels in an effort to find an efficient synthetic fuel.

The U.S. Department of Energy is sponsoring a 30-month research grant to BYU in an effort to learn of efficient uses for solid fuel in this country, according to Geoff J. Germane, principal investigator of the project.

Because of the uncertainty of petroleum in this country, more research is being done in the area of synthetic fuels, (fuels not in conventional forms)," said Germane. "The United States has a plentiful supply of solid fuel in coal, shale, tar sand and char, a product of coal processing." These are some of the types of energy being used in the project.
They will look at three or four different solid fuels to examine their combustion, pollutants and efficiency to determine which type of fuel would be best to use on a full-scale basis," said Germane.
The major use of these experimental fuels will be in generating electricity, heat and in industrial processes.

The experimental process takes place in a combustion facility located in the Clyde Building.

"Coal, (or other solid fuels) is pulverized into powder, put into the combustion facility and ignited," Germane said. According to Germane, information about the pollutants released and the amount of fuel burned during the process will aid researchers in understanding the pros and cons of the different fuels.

"When we start to understand how pollutants are formed, we can begin to eliminate the pollution," said Germane. "We have measuring devices which use a laser to measure velocity, size and concentration of the particles during the burning process."

This information will be used when decisions are made concerning which fuel would work best on a full-scale basis. If the particles are too big in small-scale research, they will go out the stack and blacken everything in full-scale use, Germane said.

"Ten years of experience in coal related research, as well as advanced measurement and combustion equipment, helped BYU obtain the grant," said Germane.

To obtain the grant, a proposal was written in response to the Department of Energy's announcement of research needed in the area. The proposal prepared by BYU was 115 pages long and contained details on BYU's experience in related research, and a description of the lab facilities.

The increasingly complex detail eased pre-encounter fears that Voyager might see only bland, yellow clouds on Saturn.

Earlier images — what Smith called "wild color pictures" — were enhanced by computer wizardry that greatly exaggerated Saturn's subtle shadings.

The slightly less dramatic photos released Sunday are "a bit closer to what we think Saturn really looks like," Smith said.

The spaceship, racing at 35,000 mph toward its closest encounter with Saturn on Wednesday, was reported in excellent condition Sunday.

Cougars conquer Eagles, 41-23

An Eagle defender knocks Eric Lane out of bounds after the Cougar running back moved the ball within yards of the goal line. The Cougars defeated North Texas State for their eighth consecutive win.

By DEBBIE HRUSKA
Universe Staff Writer

Though the score didn't match that of last week's game, the BYU Cougars defeated the Green Machine of North Texas State Saturday, 41-23.

The victory over NTSU marks the Cougar's eighth consecutive win, giving them one of the longest win streaks in the nation behind Georgia, which has 10.

According to BYU's coach LaVell Edwards, NTSU was as good as any team the Cougars had played this year. "They hit well, they execute well and their running backs are quick," he said.

But despite the strength of the Eagles, the Mean Green let BYU get ahead of them early in the game by 21 points before managing to come back with 7.

NTSU received the opening kickoff of the game only to have quarterback Joe Stevenson make the first fumble within 35 seconds. Four plays later, the Cougars had their first score. Less than a minute after that, a second Eagle fumble allowed BYU to score its second touchdown, this one with a two-point conversion.

It seemed, after two bad breaks, the visitors were finally getting things to come their way with an interception of a Jim McMahon pass at the goal line. But another fumble, this time by Malcolm Jones, and a BYU recovery, set up a third Cougar touchdown and gave BYU a commanding lead.

"The fumbles that set up BYU's 21 points at the start really hurt," said NTSU coach Jerry Moore. "On Stevenson's fumble, there was a bad exchange between him and the center. I don't know what happened on Malcolm's fumble. He doesn't normally fumble the ball."

NTSU tried to come back by attempting to match the Cougars' past use of long passes. Edwards said later that his team changed to short passing because the Eagles were prepared for the usual long bombs that the Cougars are noted for.

In making its first decent field position in the game, the Mean Green used a lateral pass on the kickoff, catching BYU off-guard, that took them down to the BYU 32-yard line. This led to putting the Eagles on the scoreboard.

"I felt like we needed to make something happen, since we had set them up with 21 quick points," Moore said.

Making something happen was all that the Eagles could do short of winning. Moore acknowledged that trying to shut McMahon down was impossible. "But we thought we could prevent the deep stuff. Our kids did a good job of coming back from being 21 points down."

Although the Cougars used many short passes, and were intercepted three times, McMahon completed 40 out of 50 attempts, setting BYU and WAC records for the most completed passes in a game. By the middle of the third quarter McMahon had completed his eighth consecutive game with 300 yards passing, breaking the record he had set last week with consecutive 300-yard passing games. By the end of the game McMahon completed 464 total passing yards.

Edwards commented that the turnovers weren't an account of McMahon's arm injury that has plagued him this season. "Jim wasn't hurting him, it was more of him under-throwing his receiver."

McMahon also broke another record he had set for four-game passing yardage and total offense. His last four games he had 1,789 yards passing and 11,000 total offense. In total offense for the season, McMahon is 212 yards from breaking the NCAA record set in 1979 by Marc Wilson.

In the second quarter the Cougars added 3 to the score and allowed to gain another touchdown. But was not to be intimidated and in the third quarter McMahon passed to Brown for another touchdown. A good field goal attempt by Gunther, the Cougars led the game 31-17.

Soccercats romp past foes

The BYU Soccercats breezed passed two teams in weekend competition in Provo.

BYU defeated Northwest Nazarene on Friday by a score of 4-0, and, on Saturday, the Cougars downed Northern Colorado 7-0.

The teams were hardly a match for the Cougars, said Coach Jim Dusara. "Our score against Nazarene should have been more than 10." "When we play with weaker teams, we don't play near our best," he said.

Friday's game started with Nelson Gonzales crossing with the ball from the right side of the field and firing into the goal, Dusara said.

It was downhill from there for Nazarene. Other Cougars scoring were Bradley Beall, with an assist from Victor Trujillo, Greg Phillips with an assist from Gonzales and Mark Stevens.

Northern Colorado was able to get only one shot off during the entire game on Saturday against the Cougars, said Dusara, while BYU had 27. The final score of 7-0 reflects this statistic, he said.

Scorers for the Cougars were Gary Rathgeber, Beal, Mark Phillips, Greg Arslanian, Greg Phillips, and Bobby Vogelsberg.

In other play over the weekend at BYU, Northwest Nazarene beat Northern Colorado, 3-0, and Idaho State, 2-1. Idaho State later defeated Northern Colorado, 2-0.

This Tuesday, the Cats take on Weber State in Ogden, said Dusara. The winner of that game will play the University of Utah in the final of the Beehive Invitational at BYU on Saturday, he said.

Coogs third in field hockey

The BYU women's field hockey team took third in the AIAW Invitational Seven Field Hockey Playoffs in Provo Saturday.

The Cougars lost a close game to Colorado State Friday, a game which was tied at 2-2 after regulation. Two overtimes did not produce a winner, so a "kickoff" was held, which CSU won to take the game, 3-2.

Saturday, in a second overtime game, the Cougars emerged 2-1 victors over Colorado.

Denver University took the Crown by defeating CSU Saturday and will advance to the nationals.

House bowling records fall

Several house records were set in this weekend's BYU Invitational Bowling Tournament, including the first sanctioned 300 game, said BYU Coach Shafter Bown.

"This will probably be the highest scoring tournament in the nation this year," said Bown.

The 300 game was bowled by Shane Brown, of Boise State.

Washington State won the 22 team men's tournament, said Bown. Ranked second in the nation, Washington State finished the tournament with a 220 average per player. "That's an amazing score. You don't see that happen very often," he said.

There were also two 297 games. To achieve a 279, said Bown, a player needs to get 11 strikes out of 12 rolls.

In addition, eight 700 series were rolled. A series is the total of three games, said Bown. One of the eight was a 767 by Shane Brown.

BYU finished fifth in the men's tournament, with a team average of 198. Top bowler for the Cougars was Tom Palkki, averaging 210.

In the women's tournament, Arizona State took home first-place honors, said Bown. BYU placed second. "Last year, BYU defeated Arizona State. This year it's just the reverse," he said.

The bowling Cougars are part of the Intermountain Bowling Conference. Other teams in the conference are Idaho State, Utah State, and the University of Utah.

The next conference match for the Cougars will be Nov. 22 at Idaho State, said Bown.

Giants snap losing streak on Cowboys

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Simms passed for yards and three touchdowns and Joe kicked a 27-yard goal with 1:07 left to enable the York Giants to win an eight-game losing streak with a 38-35 victory over the Dallas Cowboys in a National Football League action Sunday.

The Giants set up the win by hitting wide receiver Charlie Johnson with a 26-yard pass on a flea-flicker play, after the ball out to back Leon Perry on taking a return.

The win was New York's first since a 27-24 loss to the Dallas Cowboys in 1974.

Dorsett rushed for 137 yards for the Giants, but Danny Thomas threw five interceptions — the last by Woodford at the Giants' 12-yard line in the closing seconds.

The loss dropped Dallas two games behind the Philadelphia Eagles in the National Football Conference race. The Eagles raised their record to 9-1, best in the league, by handing the winless New Orleans Saints their 10th straight loss, 34-21.

Philadelphia's Ron Jaworski completed 21 of 32 pass attempts for 223 yards and hit big Harold Carmichael for TDs of 10, 6 and 25 yards.

The Giants' upset was the biggest of the day, but it wasn't the only one. The Denver Broncos surprised the San Diego Chargers 20-13, the Miami Dolphins trampled the Los Angeles Rams 35-14, the Kansas City Chiefs defeated the Seattle Seahawks 31-30 and the Cleveland Browns edged the Baltimore Colts 28-27 — all four winning on the fourth or fifth play.

Rob Lytle and Dave Preston ran for one touchdown apiece and Rod Taylor kicked 363 yards for the Chargers.

Rookie David Woodley passed for three touchdowns and ran for two more as Miami surprised Los Angeles. Woodley completed scoring passes of 31 yards to Tony Nathan, 6 yards to Tom Moore and 2 yards to Bruce Hardy and ran for TDs of 6 and 10 yards.

Steve Fuller drove Kansas City 91 yards in 11 plays, capped by Arnold Morgado's 1-yard touchdown run with 40 seconds left, as the Chiefs nipped the Seahawks. Seattle had scored on a 30-yard touchdown run by Jim Jodat with 4:10 to go.

Brian Sipe passed for two touchdowns and rookie Charles White scored on a pair of 5-yard runs as the Browns beat the Colts for their fifth consecutive victory. Cleveland, 7-3, leads Houston by one-half game and Pittsburgh by one game in the AFC Central.

Sipe completed 15 of his first 17 passes and threw 22 of 29, Baltimore's Bert Jones, who completed 27 of 39 passes for 289 yards, tossed two scoring passes in the final 1:27 to pull the Colts to within one point with 19 seconds remaining. But an onside kick failed, and the difference was a missed conversion attempt by Steve Mikejane in the second quarter.

In other games, Pittsburgh's defense forced two first-quarter turnovers to set up 10 quick points and the Steelers threatened a 302-yard, three-touchdown passing show by Tampa Bay's Doug Williams to beat the Bucs 24-21.

Vince Evans hurried three touchdown passes, two of them to James Scott, and Walter Payton scored on a 50-yard run and a 54-yard pass reception to lead the Chicago Bears to a 35-21 victory over the Washington Redskins. Tommy Kramer passed for 295 yards and two touchdowns and Kurt Knoff returned an interception 67 yards for a TD as the Minnesota Vikings blanked the Detroit Lions 34-0. The Lions committed seven turnovers and Detroit quarterback Gary Danielson was sacked eight times by the aroused Vikings' defense, which posted its first shutout since 1975.

Lynn Dickey completed 24 of 33 passes for 244 yards and Tom Birney kicked field goals of 50, 39 and 24 yards to carry the Green Bay Packers to a 23-16 triumph over the San Francisco 49ers.

The Atlanta Falcons overcame a 24-6 halftime deficit and beat the St. Louis Cardinals 33-27 on Ray Strong's 21-yard TD run with 4:42 gone in overtime. The victory, coupled with Los Angeles' loss, gave the Falcons, 7-3, a one-game lead over the Rams in the NFC West. Steve Bartkowski completed 31 of 47 passes for 378 yards for Atlanta, while Jim Hart threw for 344 yards on 25 of 43 for St. Louis.

Joe Ferguson's third touchdown pass of the game, a 31-yarder to Frank Lewis with six seconds to play, gave the Buffalo Bills a 31-24 victory over the New York Jets.

The Oakland Raiders moved into first place in the AFC West, one game ahead of San Diego, by beating the Cincinnati Bengals 28-17. Arthur Whittington returned the second-half kickoff 90 yards for the Raiders, who won their fifth in a row.

supplant Notre Dame as the No. 1 team in college football this week.

With 40 seconds left, second-ranked Georgia trailed No. 20 Florida 21-20 and faced a third-and-11 situation from its own line. But 17 seconds later, split end Lindsay Scott was jumping for the go in the Florida end zone and the Bulldogs beat a thrilling 20-21 victory that left them the nation's only unbeaten-unbeaten team.

Ironically, it took a running 3-4-let against Notre Dame by last Georgia Tech's tradition of making the No. 1 spot in The Associated Press put a real possibility.

"We were down," Georgia Coach Vince Dooley commented, referring to a point by Florida's Mark Dickert that sent out of bounds at the Bulldogs' 4-yard line with 1:35 remaining. "I don't think there was any question Florida had the game. But no matter how hard you go, you've got to hold on and never give up."

Georgia needed a couple of first downs to get in position for Ron Robinson, who led the Southeastern Conference career scoring of 250 points with two field goals and a pair of conversions, to boot under three-point rule. But, with the help of a monumental goal by the entire Florida secondary, erased that necessity.

Huck Hulse dropped back to pass and scored the secondary up to and around a run. Then he fired Scott in first-down territory at the 28. Scott's 28-yard pass to the end of the Florida defense on what went into the record book as a 50-yard play, instant in Georgia's history.

"It was a great feeling," he said. "We're going for the first time. But the Bulldogs had better not stumble because there is no shortage of challenges."

Third-ranked Florida State trimmed Miami's Virginia Tech 31-7. Rick Scott's three touchdowns passed 50 and 11 yards to Florida's defense as FSU ended a 7-0 Virginia Tech lead in the final four minutes of the first half. Scott's three touchdowns in the third period as the minutes game ended with a happy 51st birthday Bill Capone boosted a 42-yard field goal and four conversions to set a single-season NCAA kick-scoring mark of 49 points. Fourth-ranked Southern California tied Stanford 34-34. Marcus Allen rushed for 136 yards and two touchdowns to spark USC. The Trojans, like Notre Dame, have a tie in a maroon or otherwise famous record, stretched their unbeaten streak to a season record 26 games.

No. 6 Nebraska crushed Kansas State 55-40. Quarterback John Elway passed for 289 yards and three touchdowns to lead the Sooners to a 31-10 victory over the Sooners. Elway passed for 289 yards and three touchdowns to lead the Sooners to a 31-10 victory over the Sooners.

No. 7 Ohio State without a record 62-0 passing game, won by a 14-0 victory over the Sooners. Ohio State without a record 62-0 passing game, won by a 14-0 victory over the Sooners.

No. 8 Alabama whipped Louisiana State 28-7. Alabama, which had its 28th winning season and No. 1 ranking dropped last week by Mississippi State, got back on track against LSU as Mike Odoms talked over in short on runs. William Primrose, a man of international fame as a virtuoso viola soloist, demonstrates his skill to his students. A gifted musical student all his life, Primrose now 76, spends most of his time travelling and teaching.

Renowned musician joins Y faculty

By JULIE SKOUSEN
Universe Morning Editor

For many, the mastering of a musical instrument is an accomplishment which requires years of frustration and hours of compulsive practicing. Yet, for William Primrose, a man of international fame as a virtuoso viola soloist, the time spent as a student in music is capped by his statement, "I never remember having to slave over anything."

A master of his art, Primrose comes to BYU after touring and teaching all over the world. He has been on the faculties of many universities, including the Indiana and Tokyo universities. He spent a number of years living in the large city of Tokyo, which makes Provo quite a change.

"After living in Tokyo, which has 13 million people, my wife and I thought it would be nice to live someplace a little smaller," Primrose said. One of the advantages of living in more urban areas, however, is the many quality students available for teaching.

"My colleagues warned me about living here, because they said there would not be too many people who would be willing to come here for music lessons. I said that was just what I wanted, because those students who were sufficiently eager to come here to take lessons from me would be the ones with enough ability and motivation to do it."

Born in Scotland, Primrose came from a musical family. "My father played both the violin and viola, and my mother's brother was also musical. I was brought up in that milieu," he said. Primrose began school at age 4, and completed what would be about the equivalent of high school here.

Primrose went on to the Guildhall School of Music in London, and then to private study in Belgium. "I never felt any compulsion to study," Primrose said. "If something interested me, I could work on it all day if I had to. It may sound conceited, but I think I had a lot of talent. I don't remember ever having to slave over anything."

After he was out of school, Primrose continued to learn, but on stage. "The building of a career is a very strange thing," he said. "I was just in the right era at the right time. The period was right for it."

Career life

The man who has carved a place in the world for an instrument once regarded as a "pensioner's" instrument is modest about his accomplishments. "My career in many ways was sheer luck," he said.

As part of his curriculum, Primrose joined the National Broadcasting Company's orchestra, where he stayed for four years. "NBC had a Firestone hour, where the famous tenor, Richard Crooks, sang," Primrose said. It was through this acquaintanceship that Primrose got a break in his career.

"One day I was walking down West 57th Street and I decided to walk on the north side of the street, something I never do. I ran into Richard Crooks, and he invited me to go on tour with him and be his comic relief." Hardly comic relief, the talented Primrose's career took off from there.

Primrose plays both the violin and viola, but concentrated on the viola in later life. "I did play the violin for years, but then I saw the light," he smiled.

Actually, Primrose was eager to play chamber music, and felt he had a better chance if he took up the viola. "There were so many more violinists, that I felt I would be more likely to be able to play chamber music if I played the viola. I enjoy it more, too."

Teaching days

Once he turned to teaching, a few things became a little more difficult for Primrose. "When I first started to teach, I had to analyze. A student would ask me how to do something and I would say, 'You just do it.' But of course that wasn't enough. I'd have to analyze how it was done to be able to say how."

These days, Primrose continues to have a busy schedule. "I do classes all over," he said. "I became disenchanted with the regular routine of teaching classes. It's too much like a barber shop. My teaching is spread all over the world. That's all right with me. I've spent my life traveling."

At 76, Primrose is making no firm plans for the future. "I leave it to God," he said. "I never plan anything. Things come step by step."

Church group battles sex on TV

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — In a battle against sex on television, the Joelton Church of Christ sees itself as David against a mighty Goliath. And its stones are finding their mark.

The church says its 8-month-old "clean up television" campaign has attracted more than a half million followers in the United States and Canada. It has been commended by the Southern Baptist Convention's Christian Life Commission and endorsed by conservative TV evangelist Jerry Falwell.

The group's pressure also prompted one of TV's largest sponsors, Warner-Lambert Co., to revise its advertising policy and withdraw commercials from four shows the church considers morally offensive.

"I think there are a lot of people in this country who are frustrated by what is going on in television today," said John Hurt, church pastor and spokesman for the group. "People have said to themselves a thousand times, 'Somebody ought to do something,' so we did."

Working from the small church in Joelton, a Nashville suburb, participants surveyed several hundred Church of Christ members across the nation to compile a list of TV shows considered offensive.

Heading the list were NBC's "Saturday Night Live," CBS's "Dallas," and ABC's "Soap," "Three's Company," and "Charlie's Angels."

Syndicated shows listed as offensive were "The Newlywed Game," "The Dating Game," and "Three's a Crowd."

Television's best shows, according to the survey, included NBC's "Little House on the Prairie" and CBS' "60 Minutes."

Ignoring networks and producers, the campaign went after the economic soul of television — the advertisers. Three corporations were warned to withdraw their commercials from "offensive" shows or face boycotts of their products.

The three are Warner-Lambert, which makes such products as Listerine, Roloids, Shick razors and Trident gum; General Foods Corp. — Maxwell House Coffee, Jell-O and Kool-Aid; and American Home Products — Chef Boy-Ar-Dee meals, Golden's Mustard and Sani-Flush, among others.

Hurt said more companies would be targeted later.

Through mass mailings the campaign enlisted 6,000 Church of Christ branches and received signed, pre-printed cards from more than 500,000 people pledging to carry out a boycott if called, said Hurt.

Shall said the company agreed to revise its advertising policy, which he said had been concerned primarily with television violence, to include stronger prohibitions against sexual material.

Warner-Lambert

recently quit advertising on "Saturday Night Live," "The New Line Game," and "Three's a Crowd." Shall said campaign's role in decisions was that "consciousness-raising." Hurt said Warner-Lambert's response pleased the group, on Oct. 5 it had boycotting the companies because took no similar act.

State Sen. Jensen dies

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — State Sen. Moroni Jensen died Saturday following a massive heart attack suffered at his Salt Lake City home.

Jensen, a former president of the Utah Senate, was defeated by incumbent David Monson this week in his bid to become lieutenant governor. A retired educator, Jensen had long been active in Democratic Party politics.

Family members said Jensen, 68, had been working in his yard during the day. He was getting ready to go out with his wife, Vivian, when he died. The senator had no record of heart trouble.

Jensen had served 14 years in the Utah Legislature. He recently ran as the Democratic candidate for lieutenant governor.

Jensen is survived by his widow and his two sons, Leon and Jerold. He had seven grandchildren.

Senate Majority Leader Fred Finlinson, R-Salt Lake, said Jensen would be deeply missed by legislators on both sides of the aisle.

"Moroni and I were very close. He really became kind of one of my favorite senators, even though we were of opposite parties."

Sen. Omar Bunnell, D-Price, a former majority leader in the Senate, said he and Jensen "were almost like brothers."

"He was the president of the Senate when I was majority leader in 1977-78. He was a great guy. He was one of the few fellows I know who acted from principles. If it wasn't right to him, he wouldn't do it for any temporary advantage. And when it came to education, if something wasn't for the benefit of the children, his lip would come out and he'd get mad."

Senate Minority Leader Thorpe Waddingham, D-Delta, said Jensen was one of the most compassionate men he ever knew. "I think those qualities came through when he was a legislator and in the legislation he worked for... He was one of the kindest men I ever knew."

ann Wondra, general secretary of the world's largest repertory theater, is visiting the campus to act and give his personal touch to the play "Jedermann" or "Everyman." Here Wondra (left) discusses the play with Tom Rogers, professor of Asian and Slavic languages.

Austrian directs Y production

By MARA CALLISTER
Assistant Entertainment Editor

general secretary of the world's largest repertory theater, the "Burg Theater" in Vienna, is giving his time this week directing BYU's production of "Jedermann" or "Everyman."

the director, Johann Wondra, comes with a list of qualifications.

for his appointment with the theater in 1975, Wondra assumed responsibility for more than 150 actors as well as "the planning of the repertoire and the quality of their productions," said Tom Rogers, professor of Asian and Slavic languages.

Wondra is actually general secretary for a complex of theaters and two operas that annually receive million support from the state," Rogers said.

director, a member of the LDS Church, is over the new Vienna-Austria stake. "It is the most stake in Europe, completely surrounded by communist countries," Rogers explained.

stake president said his purpose in Provo is to see an English version of this German morality play because of its social significance and historical value.

hour and a half drama will run Tuesday through Saturday at 8 p.m. in 205 JRCB. Free tickets are picked up in advance at the College of Arts in the JKB.

one act play has opened the Festival of Arts in an every year since the end of World War I, with performance outside the principal Cathedral in Salzburg. For the Y production, Wondra will use right Hugo von Hofmannsthal's version of "Everyman" but give it a new emphasis.

the story is modified in terms of the fullness of the stored gospel which has universal qualities to aid Rogers.

Wondra is taking the liberty to rework this moral story for our own time and our own people. The author (Hofmannsthal) did at the first of century for his audience."

The director explained, "the story of 'Everyman' is a story for everyman and every time and every society." The main character "enjoyed his possessions selfishly and not for serving others. He did not think of the needs of his neighbors and this problem is everywhere."

For the BYU audience, Wondra plans to change the appearance of the play's allegorical characters.

"Good deeds" and "faith," traditionally were always earnest and rather strange looking," explained Wondra. "But they should look like people you would like to be around all the time. You don't want to marry someone always earnest, someone who never laughs or plays with children. It must be terrible."

The devil, too, changes from its traditional costume of a monster with horns to a man in a black suit, white shirt and clashing tie. Why? Because the director believes the devil is a very intelligent spirit.

The grim drama, originally a Catholic morality play written in the middle ages, shows the best work of Austria, Wondra said, comparing it to the humorous operetta "Die Fledermaus."

"The light, frivolous side of Austria was a cliché. But 'Everyman' is a dance of death for a society."

Little remains of former 'Utah War' army post

By E. DAVIDSON
Staff Edition Editor

cemetary, crushed, decaying foundations, and two old buildings are the only remains of the camp which once was the home of thousands of soldiers sent to an eye on Brigham Young and the Mormon camp Floyd, which was located at Fairfield near the west valley of Lake, housed more than 7,000 troops and employees of the army which came to the valley in 1858 during the Utah War.

The camp's history is a story of many confrontations and conflicts between members of the Church and the U.S. Army.

James Buchanan

The army was ordered to leave after reports sent to President James Buchanan that the Mormons were fighting against the army of the United States, according to a report by Thomas Alexander and Leonard Johnson.

The president ordered the report from all judges and officers in the territory who were disaffected to the Mormons. He had hastily underwritten from Congress the press to send the army to put down the Mormon rebellion.

Brigham Young, the territorial governor, was aware of any action nor had he officially notified the army was being against the Mormons. After Rockwell and riders brought the July 24, 1857, at the time as the pioneers celebrating the anniversary of arrival in Salt Lake City, the army was immediately put martial law into effect, and a militia of 1,000 men was equipped to harass and delay the army from arriving in Utah.

Under the command of Lot Smith, the militia burned pasture on the prairies, burned supply wagons, scattered livestock and delayed the army from entering the valley until the spring of 1858.

Army in Utah

After negotiating with church leaders, it was agreed the army would march through the valley without stopping and would establish a camp far away.

When the army marched through Salt Lake City, it found it abandoned except for a few men who were standing ready with torches to burn the city if the soldiers stopped.

Col. (later General) Albert Sidney Johnston marched his troops to Fairfield where he found ample wood and water to establish the camp he named after Secretary of War John B. Floyd.

The camp grew quickly and actually became the third most populous city in the territory behind Salt Lake City and Provo.

The town of Fairfield was settled three years earlier by John Carson and a six other families. They had begun farming and had built a stone fort for protection from the Shoshoni Indians.

Indian trouble

The present-day city cemetery at Fairfield has some headstones, and footstones in the sagebrush with the words "Killed by Indians" describing the fate of some early pioneers.

Although the Mormons were not exactly thrilled to have the army in Utah, the camp soon turned into an economic boon for them.

Allen headstones shows early Fairfield pioneer was "killed by Indians." The town was the site of Camp Floyd where the U.S. Army was posted to watch the Mormons before the Civil War.

Local carpenters, masons and artisans were paid $3 to $7 per day plus board for their labor. Privates in the army at the time were receiving only $11 per month, which usually arrived weeks late, according to diaries.

Adobe bricks and lumber were purchased from church-owned and private companies for construction of barracks, stables, headquarters and a theater.

The freight company of Russell, Wadell and Majors (of Pony Express fame) had to enlarge its operations to include 4,000 employees, 1,000 mules, 40,000 oxen and 3,500 wagons in order to keep the large army supplied.

Carpetbagger

One non-Mormon businessman reportedly bought flour from Mormon farmers in Utah County for $4 per hundredweight and then sold it to the army for $30 per hundredweight.

Church leaders encouraged pie-feeding of foodstuffs to the army "to insure a reasonable profit for the Saints," the pamphlet said.

The soldiers' lifestyle at the camp was, to say the least, interesting. There were 17 saloons, complete with gamblers, prostitutes and slickers on the civilian side of town in a section called "Dobieville" or "Frogtown."

Killings and shootings were reportedly common, and the army cemetery holds the graves of 84 soldiers and civilian employees who died during the camp's three-year existence.

Mail from the eastern states for soldiers took an average of 22 days for delivery.

Although their diet appeared to be quite good, diarrhea was common as well as other discomforts caused by "that vile sort of beer the Mormons sold."

Soldiers produced many plays in their theater and some officers occupied themselves with scientific studies of the desert. Because of a lack of decent women, many officers danced on Saturday nights with each other.

Other soldiers searched for precious minerals and filed some of the earliest mining claims in the territory. The soldiers also started the first Masonic lodge in Utah and published the state's first non-Mormon newspaper.

Physical conditions

The water supply was limited and muddy and the camp was constantly plagued with dust storms named "Johnsons" by enlisted men in honor of their commanding officer, Gen. Johnston.

John Carson tore down his stone fort and replaced it with a large inn. Being the LDS branch president in Fairfield, he frowned upon the wild gente behavior of the soldiers and maintained his inn as an "oasis of decency."

He would not allow liquor in his establishment and banned ruckie waiting and round dancing, permitting only square dancing.

His inn later became a stop for the Pony Express and the overland stagecoach. Many notable statesmen, lawmen, Indian Chiefs and church leaders stayed there.

In 1864 the inn and the old army commissary building were opened as museums after extensive renovation. Myrtle Carson Erickson, a granddaughter of John Carson, is one of the state rangers in charge

Military action

Military actions at Camp Floyd included scouting several new routes to California, fighting in two battles with Indians, burying victims of the Mountain Meadows massacre and transporting the survivors back to the eastern states.

Frictions between Mormons and soldiers were heightened in 1860 when soldiers attended a controversial trial in Provo, were involved in a fight with several townspeople and took several prisoners, including a former LDS bishop, back to Camp Floyd.

The prisoners were soon released, but controversy over the incident raged for months.

Later, a Sgt. Pike gave Mormon prisoner Howard Spencer a concussion with his rifle. When Pike was being transported to Salt Lake to stand trial on charges of killing, Spencer shot and killed him.

The incident caused many of Pike's men to burn supplies and structures belonging to Mormons living in Cedar Fort in Cedar Valley.

In 1861, Gen. Johnston was ordered back to the states and Col. Phillip St. George Cooke, former commander of the Mormon Battalion, assumed command.

Camp renamed

When Johnston and Secretary of War Floyd defected to the confederacy, Cooke renamed the post Fort Crittenden after a senator from Kentucky.

After the outbreak of the civil war, he received orders in 1861 by Pony Express to abandon the camp and return to Kansas.

Army supplies were sold at giveaway prices, buildings were razed and extra munitions were blown up.

Cooke presented the camp flagpole to Brigham Young. He was later assigned to the defense of Washington D.C.

Fairfield is a peaceful town today, with only about 100 residents. The quiet grain fields leave little hint of the wild army camp which was located there a little over a century earlier.

Haitians rescue planned

MIAMI (AP) — A Bahamian government leaves port Monday to begin the rescue of 22 Haitians stranded on a tiny island for more than a month — a mission delayed because the U.S. was busy with other priorities, a Bahamian spokesman said.

The rescue was a matter of government scheduled to pick up the Bahamian seaman Bill Kallis by telephone from the island. "It wasn't able to move any faster than that," the Bahamian spokesman said Oct. 9 by the Coast Guard, which notified Bahamian officials. Five Haitians are believed to be starved before the Coast Guard discovered the boat and began weekly food and water. The Bahamian government has jurisdiction over the island, and said the rescue would leave Monday, as had been previously scheduled, but would reach the island on Tuesday. The Haitians were apparently hoping to reach U.S. by boat when they were stranded on Cayo Lobos, a football-field size island off the northeastern coast of Cuba some 300 miles from their homeland.

"The Arts in the Church: Orphans, Missionaries, Foes, or Friends?"

Dr. Booth will consider first why churches have often been at war with art, and why they have often treated artists as orphans or enemies. Then he will warn about what happens when churches try to treat art as simply an extension of missionary work, and about what happens when artists try to turn themselves into prophets and art into religion. Finally, he will explore the possibility of a true friendship between religion and art, two essentially different enterprises that nevertheless need each other.

Question and Answer Session to Follow Lecture

'Empire's' Yoda prefers low profile

HACKENSACK, N.J. (AP) — Who's the biggest box-office attraction of 1980? It's not Robert Redford, John Travolta, or even Clint Eastwood. It's a 900-year-old guy who stands knee-high to a wookiee and spouts platitudes in a voice that sounds like cross between Walter Brennan and the Cookie Monster.

He is Yoda, the pint-sized hero of "The Empire Strikes Back" and a star in any galaxy. In the runaway hit sequel to "Star Wars," the learned leprechaun with the big ears has done more than levitate spaceships and teach Luke Skywalker the ways of The Force. He has thrusted Frank Oz, the man behind the wee fellow, from out of the Muppets' shadow and into a limelight all his own.

No matter that the 36-year-old Oz has been the force behind such marvelous creations as the inimitable Miss Piggy, the Cookie Monster, Grover and Fozzie Bear, Jim Henson, the creator of the mini-industry known as the Muppets, rightfully gets the lion's share of the attention and acclaim. The bearded Henson may do American Express credit-card commercials, but he doesn't leave home without Frank Oz.

With a little luck, Oz just might accomplish what no mortal or Jedi master has ever done: receive an Academy Award nomination — as best supporting actor — for a character made of latex, electronic gadgetry and movie magic.

Considering that "The Empire Strikes Back" has become the most popular movie of the year and that the film's director, Irvin Kershner, has called Yoda "the heart, the pulsating center of the entire film," a case could certainly be made for an Oscar nomination for the man behind Yoda.

Oz came close last year when his portrayal of Miss Piggy in "The Muppet Movie" became the subject of a feverish write-in campaign for best actress.

Says Oz in a rare interview, by telephone from his working base in London, "The attention was very nice. If you ask Miss Piggy, she'll tell you that the Oscar meant very much to her and that she was honored to even be considered in the same company as those other great actresses. But I'm sure she cries in her pillow at night and hates every one of them."

What about a nomination for his performance as Yoda? "The thought has occurred to me, but not for very long," Oz admits. "If you start thinking about acceptance speeches before the fact, it's not very constructive."

Oz says he took the role of the Spock-eyed Yoda for purely selfish motives. Henson Associates, the Muppets' parent company, plans to make a fantasy movie using puppets and Oz wanted to see how "Star Wars" genius George Lucas and his brain trust operated.

The balding, mustachioed Oz took an immediate liking to the balding lilliputian from the swamp planet of Dagobah, but the working conditions were less than conducive to award-winning performances. The set for the scenes on the swamp planet was appropriately fetid and steamy thanks to a sugar-base smoke, and the cast and crew were reduced to wearing gas masks while Oz and his assistants manipulated the two-foot high Yoda from a narrow trench.

Did Oz ever dream that Yoda would develop a cult following, with his elfin visage adorning T-Shirts, toys, posters, jewelry, Hallows-een masks, and notebooks? "When you start thinking about making a character into a star, you're in big trouble."

Oz has a tendency to stay in the background, downplaying his own contributions and praising his colleagues. The major reason he's so publicity-shy is that he likes his characters to stand on their own two feet: A puppet loses its magic if its strings are too visible.

While Oz did make a rare nonpuppet acting appearance recently — as a prison guard in "The Blues Brothers" — the course he has charted for himself over the next year will take him behind the cameras more and may preclude a reprise as Yoda in the next "Star Wars" adventure.

Oz's immediate plans focus on the sequel to "The Muppet Movie," which will be released next summer. Oz is a co-producer. Then he and Henson will direct "The Dark Crystal," a fantasy film inspired by Brian Froud's delicate paintings of gnomes and elves.

It is a far cry from Oz's childhood puppeteering in Oakland, Calif. A naturalized American, Oz and his parents, both amateur puppeteers, emigrated from Belgium when Oz was Yoda-high. He says he never dreamed that puppets could lead to such success.

"I really looked up to the most popular kid in my grammar school, and I remember one day when I was doing a puppet show that he came up to me and said, 'What the heck are you doing this stuff for? Puppets are stupid. You'll never make any money doing that.'"

"It's nice to look back on that grammar-school experience and realize that being a puppeteer is a very worthwhile profession. It's given me a lot of satisfaction."

It seems to me, Mr. Ichthys, that Marine Biology may be your thing!

WHAT IS A CAC?

In each College and Nonmajor Program there is a College Advisement Center (CAC)—a creature which is waiting and hoping to help students. Some of the things a College Advisement Center can do for you are (1) give you academic advice, such as information on majors, (2) keep your academic advisement record, (3) evaluate your transfer credit for major requirements, (4) arrange faculty advisement sessions for you, (5) let you know about career and academic assistance seminars, (6) clear you for graduation in your major, (7) help you register, (8) help you add and drop classes, (9) arrange referrals and appointments for all sorts of questions, problems, or things you want to know, (10) explain what your degree requirements are, and (11) provide orientation programs if you are a new student.

You don't have to be in trouble or have a problem to drop in and see someone at an advisement center. Most students need to know a little about what career options exist, or where their major is leading them. You may be training yourself to be a Fuller-brush man or Avon Lady without knowing it. The College Advisement Centers are not going to make decisions for you, but the advisers would be excited to help you explore all the choices.

Drop in on your College Advisement Center—the people there would love to see you. Each of the ten colleges and Nonmajor Programs has an advisement center with a full-time qualified adviser prepared to offer specialized help to all students within it.
